LEARNING OBJECTIVES

At the conclusion of this activity the participant should be able to:

1. Recognize the importance of early recognition of cardiac and diabetes in patients with myotonic dystrophy and learn strategies to more effectively manage cardiac and diabetic complications in these patients.
2. Recognize easily and earlier patterns of spread of neurological disability in ALS patients and to learn strategies aimed at reduction of respiratory events and early recognition of respiratory complications in these patients.
3. Recognize the varied patterns of neurological involvement in muscular dystrophy and myopathy patients. Furthermore at the conclusion of this activity the participant should be able to recognize interventions aimed at reduction of respiratory and cardiac events and early recognition of respiratory and cardiac complications in these patients.

COURSE OVERVIEW

2012 2ND ANNUAL Neuromuscular Colloquium

The 2012 Neuromuscular Colloquium will provide a forum for regional and national neuromuscular specialists to gather and discuss new ideas in clinical research; deliberate on difficult and atypical cases to come to a more cohesive diagnosis and management and treatment plans; and to develop collaborative research projects.

This Colloquium will present the latest and most current understanding of the pathogenesis and clinical presentations of a select group of neuromuscular disorders. The latest and most current evidence-based data on management and treatment of a select group of neuromuscular disorders will be discussed. Live case presentations to the audience will help participants to recognize and understand the different and varying presentations of common neuromuscular disorders.

TARGET AUDIENCE

Neurologists, neuromuscular specialists, clinical neurophysiology, and all healthcare professionals involved in the treatment of patients with neuromuscular disease.
