

PLEXUS

Journal of Arts and Humanities

University of California, Irvine
College of Medicine

2004 Edition

Entrust in Oneself Photography by Francesca Staiti, Class of 2006

FRONT COVER PHOTO:

Desert Solitude

Trung Minh Thai MD
Department of Psychiatry

BACK COVER ARTWORK:

After Hours

David Finley, Class of 2004

Sponsors

Dean Cesario's Office
The Office of Educational Affairs
The Office of Advancement/Alumni
The Office of Admissions and Outreach
The Associated Graduate Students
The California Medical Association Foundation

PLEXUS

Journal of Arts and Humanities

UCI College of Medicine

2004 Edition

Editor-in-Chief

Meghann Kaiser, Class of 2006

Senior Editors

Nicholas Athanassiou, Class of 2006 | Audio

Meghann Kaiser, Class of 2006 | Creative Writing

C. Gail Ryan, Class of 2006 | Layout & Design

Lena Shultz, Class of 2006 | Marketing & Outreach

Mary Wang, Class of 2006 | Visual Art

Associate Editors

Jeanette Waller, Class of 2007 | Audio

Ken Lam, Class of 2007 | Marketing & Outreach

Brian McMichael, Class of 2007 | Creative Writing

Randy Wei, Class of 2007 | Layout & Design

Selection Editors

Christine Chan, Class of 2006

Salina Lee, Class of 2006

Glen Moore, Class of 2006

Troy Pulas, Class of 2006

Faculty Advisors

Johanna Shapiro, Ph.D.

Lloyd Rucker, M.D.

The PLEXUS staff wishes to recognize the hard work and support of the following individuals:
Nathan L. Bruce, Warren Wiechmann, Al Stoffel at Shoreline Press, Dr. Alberto Manetta, Manoj Kesarwani, Carroll Rudy, Bob Hammer, Marcida Dodson, Christine Stoffel, Darren Raphael, Dr. Marianne Ross, Amy Shulz, Alice Parsons, Judith Frank, Barbara Lutz, Mark Sellick, and Lora Simmons

“it’s easy”

talking to my wife
at one in the morning
about reading poetry
begetting writing poetry
then it comes out, “when we can watch cable while laying in bed that’s when I know we’ve made it,”
and just like that,
a poem
and then this,
another.

-Michael Doo, Class of 2004

NOT EQUAL TO THE WHOLE

Pathology
Study of suffering
A misnomer
--These specimens suffer no longer--
The sum of the parts
Jellylike in formaldehyde froth
Arrives in our classroom packaged in plastic...
Two lungs, two kidneys, a brain, and One damp heart
Blanched, bloodless, beatless,
beaten,
Exhibit A.

-Meghann Kaiser, Class of 2006

Wash Day in Venice Painting by Betty Wong, Administration Analyst, Department of Pediatrics

Untitled Photography by Darren Raphael, Class of 2006

AS SHE PUSHES

silken thighs
sweat film embracing taut self
as she pushes

the rhythm of the pain dances round her navel
as she pushes

screams of everywoman fly round passive walls
as she pushes

hair turns back muscles quiver
feet reject stirrup bounds
as she pushes

form into substance
self into shape
as she pushes

thought into void
sound into silence
as she pushes

christopher into the world
screaming

-Vanessa Francis,
Training Coordinator, Human Resources

Self Impression, February 2004 Painting by C. Gail Ryan, Class of 2006

A Heavy Plea

There is a ten minute window in my day when I can eat whatever I want and neither of you can stop me. Right after Rosa goes home. Mom is upstairs changing out of her lawyer clothes, and Dad is still trapped in his rush hour commute, another long day in court. I take as much as I can without you ever knowing, or yelling those insults you believe will scare and shame the weight off. I used to time it perfectly. I can be meticulous too you know. Though lately I've been slipping. Dad catches me as I leave the scene. Crumbs are evidence. A peanut butter knife in the sink. And a motive you've tried to understand. Before you asked for help, you used to wonder what made me eat. Finally a subject that left you at a loss for words. After law school you thought you were prepared, but the Bar doesn't test for how to overcome the embarrassment of an overweight daughter.

Teachers say I'm quiet, afraid to raise my hand, afraid to draw any more attention. They say they see how the other kids treat me in the hallway, and at lunch. Your lawyer friends suggested therapy. An insult. But Mom, you were curious, and finally admitted your inability to solve this one. You tried to cut back my diet, overflowed the house with vegetables and fruits, hid the sweets, and signed me up for scheduled teen exercise programs. It wasn't working. My therapist warned of the harmful effects of low self-esteem, and advised you to be patient and kind; humiliation will not make her stop, she said.

Dad, you see me as a challenge, your challenge. This "illness" is something your superior intellect and reasoning skills should help you overcome. Are you helping me though? You prosecute people with problems so much greater than mine, but this is different. This one is personal. And a lack of self-control has no place within your world of order and rigid laws and pinstripes.

You can yell and curse, joke about my weight like everyone else, blame me for how I am, and send me to a shrink. You think this will work? Well I'll only make it harder for you. You catch me because I want you to. The disobedient eating in the kitchen, missing my exercise class, wrappers in my bedroom waste basket. I'm not sloppy or forgetful. It's all done with intent. You want my motive? It used to be no self-confidence, or hopelessness – a continuous cycle of eating because I'm depressed, then becoming depressed because of my weight. Most of the time it was out of apathy and self-hatred. Sometimes it was an escape from my life, from you. Now I eat to mock your futile efforts to change me, your desperate attempts to fix your pathetic daughter. Now, I eat for revenge.

- Savak Teymoorian, Class of 2006

AND Photography by Edan Wernick, Class of 2007

TV(mind)Set

I need a revolution.
I need someone to wake me up and change the channel-
But I just stopped playing video games.

I need inspiration.
I need someone to show me that the world can be seen as grey;
And not as program, menu, double-click, select, start, B, or A.

I need enlightenment.
(TV) "...but recent polls suggest that 73% of Americans are not in favor of one..."

I need...sh*t-another commercial?
The controls are on the...
(TV) "...try new and improved.....
...easy.....simple.....worry free.....no mess... no hassle.....no thinking.....no thinking...
.....convenient.....convenient....."

I need convenience.

- Nick Athanassiou, Class of 2006

Lily 2, San Francisco Photography by Natasha Shah, Associate Specialist, Beckman Laser Institute

Lake Louise, Banff National Park
Alberta, Canada (Opposite Page)

Photography by Jose Ospina Ph.D., M.D./Ph.D. Student

Synchronicity Sculpture by Fran Stephens, CAM Coordinator, Educational Affairs

My Cup Runneth Over

Once you get there, everyone wants to know what it's like. Your sister, your best friend, the old lady your parents talk to at church, even the tall red-headed guy who sat two rows behind you in freshmen algebra. Is it hard? Is it fun? Is it better or worse than undergrad? Are the professors nice, is there a lot of homework, are there any hot guys in your class, what does the anatomy lab smell like, are the standardized patients hairy, and how many caramel macchiatos does it take to stay up for 46 hours straight? What's it like? What's medical school like? Well, I've been fielding these questions for almost two years now, and I'll tell you all the best way I know how—all you ladies out there will know what I mean. Just think back—way, way back—to sometime around the sixth grade....

I had signed up with a team of three other girls to run relay for the school track-and-field day. Don't get me wrong—I was never what you might call athletic. I was always more of a "Mathlete" and "Academic Decathlon" kind of medalist. But this race seemed the chance to outrun my reputation. I practiced for hours every day at recess (or for 20 minutes, anyway, since that was all the time they gave us, but you get the point). I had the whole routine down to an art: pick up baton, run, run, run, trip, get up, run, run, hand-off baton, stand there hunched over all casual-like without looking like I'm desperately out of breath-- and graciously accept trophy. I was a well-oiled machine, primed for junior high fame. Then, the unthinkable happened. I remember, my mom had dropped me off for school early that Thursday morning. A silvery blue mist still hung over the playground asphalt, and the slant spring sunshine just dimly warmed my bare forearms. I took off running towards the tetherball courts, imagining the poles to be my awaiting teammates. My fist seethed tighter around the imaginary baton. My shoes smacked urgently over raspy gravel. I could see my goal. But something was horribly wrong. At first I thought I was out of breath. My own gasps bit into me; my chest ached deep with a heaviness, tugging at me, holding me back. All too soon, though, I realized the devastating truth—I wasn't out of shape. Rather, for the first time in my life, I actually HAD a shape. Overnight, it seemed, hormones had found me. And as I looked down, aghast, at the two puny but distinctly visible molehills stewing insolently beneath my T-shirt, I knew—right then I knew—that things were beginning to change all around me.

Needless to say, I didn't win that race, or the trophy. Junior high rushed over me with all the usual drama, but not one opportunity to deliver that grand acceptance speech I had so enthusiastically prepared. Then high school, and college, and pretty soon, of course, medical school, and here I am. So now you're asking, what on earth does my little story have to do with med school? More than you would believe. We all start medical school like that little girl I once knew—striving for great things, intent on the prize, trained and trimmed and ready to win. We come from the biggest and best schools in the nation—we ARE the biggest and the best—replete with the blinding bright scores to prove it. But the moment you first set foot in that underground anatomy lab, fling the canvas off the corpse, and try to find the thoracic duct, well, you know you've hit mental puberty. Acne, armpit hair, and boobs—great big boobs. Weighing you down. Dragging on the ground. Because I may look like a B-cup to you, but in my mind, I'm a double D.

-Meghann Kaiser, Class of 2006

Swallow-tailed Gull: Wolf Island, Galapagos Photography by Tiffany Chang, Class of 2006

First Sip

Coffee, sweet nectar
Guide me through another day
Deadlines stare at me

- Marcida Dodson Senior Editor of Marketing, UCI Medical Center

Iguazu Falls on a Sunny Day
Photography by Phil Reich,
Class of 2007

No Penance

Old man, I know not your name
And nor who you are

But don't you explain!

I need nothing but these Glasses and gloves, so

Please,

Do not try to move me
To thoughts of your life,

Who you might be

Or rather, that is, wherefore
Because I really can't care

For

Your fabula vitae, only your corpus Is mine now to fully corrupt -

A queer sort of quest,

For secrets and truths, to honor and live
By, cherish and keep, and to others

Give

This knowledge – a gift! And also Receive, and extract the most possible

This day, as it stands

In our way of discovery
And progress! So proceed I must, believe-you-

Me

To use this tool – and forcing my hand
Unlock your bare body

Whole wide open and naked

And taking no time to bother
With thoughts of you as a

Father

Or brother I suppose
For that matter of fact

It doesn't at all!

So let us get to your door
That we might start searching

For

What it is we seek
That surely is hidden

At the center of you, but Since we're not sure how, exactly – or why I'll take this blade now and quietly

I

Will slice you open so wide like
A fish, or some piece of bread

But having no wine

To enjoy with all this – and now I laugh
But it's not funny at all, now that I

Have

To do this without even seeing your face
'Cause it's masked with that shroud

Of surgical wrap

And for all I know you even grinned
When it occurred to me I might have Sinned.

-Anonymous

Human Territories Photography by Stephanie Dittmer, Class of 2005

Flowers Painting by Sentelle Eubanks, Research Assistant - Department of Psychiatry and Human Behavior

“what can pass as a poem these days”

every day is filled with uncommon moments worth writing about but not always worth reading about

- Michael Doo, Class of 2004

Daisy's Comfort
Quilt by Daphne Gallagher, Webmaster - UCI Marketing

Stitches Photography by Nguyen Pham, Class of 2006

Trapped in Myself Photography by Reuben Chen, Class of 2006

Mr. R., One of a Type

65 year-old white male qualified for placement
alcoholism X30 years
cirrhosis
2 packs cigarettes/day X50 years hypertension
multiple small strokes increasing reliance on wheelchair

returned to Iowa after many years in California, twice-divorced, estranged from his children, unstable housing situation, limited social support

dry if not sober, ornery life-long Cubs fan the staff likes him because he's a character

Social Security covers the veterans home, health and comfort items, cigarettes from the Reservation, with some change to spare after missing twenty-five years, he sends the daughter a blanket for Christmas

she makes the 4,000-mile round-trip, twice to gain her own memory of him, then within two years

pulmonary congestion bed rest
O2 - continuous positive airway pressure Patient no longer smoking >2 liters fluid drained from chest cavity differential diagnosis mass in right lung
further interventions refused hospice only DNR noted

a letter arrives from the stepson in California the eldest son in Colorado takes on power of attorney the Cubs make the National League play-offs and lose the pennant 3 games to 4

-Brian McMichael, Class of 2007

“Mary Dean”
Sculpture by Miya Allen,
Class of 2007

Grand Central, NY
Photography by Vinh Nguyen, Class of 2005

Driving with My Grandpa

After my grandpa stopped being a big city surgeon
he moved to the Ozarks and became a country doc

When we visited,
my brother and sister stayed back to eat pancakes play dirtball or catch fireflies

I went with grandpa in his rickety, rattletrap car driving along bumpy, unpaved roads that seemed relentless

Grandpa didn't say much He had a small smile that showed up when he asked me if I knew how to tip a cow

Mostly the radio blared
twangy tunes or hell-fire preaching which also brought back the smile

One time he drove farther out than I'd ever been
The house was just two rooms a dirt floor, no electricity

Localmotions (Series of 7) Paintings by Mary Wang, Class of 2006

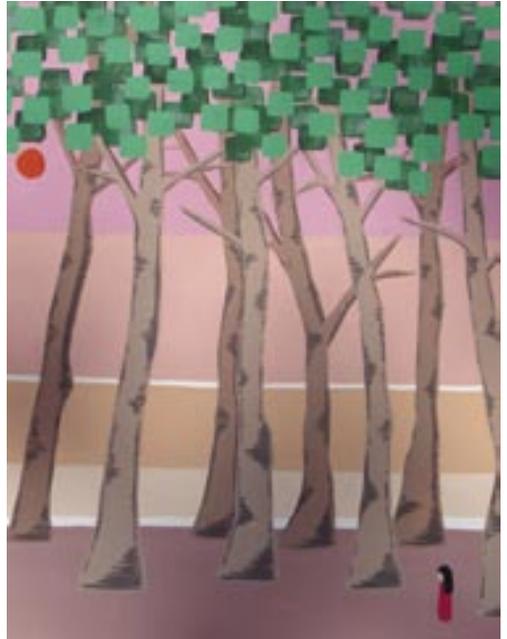

In the bed
was a woman with no face Skin cancer, my grandpa said
This didn't need to happen, he said

She never sought out care until it was far too late
She was too proud and too poor
She worked too hard

feeding her men
and her pigs, sweeping that floor till the cancer ate her face and there was nothing left

I remember she had no face
But I remember more the way my grandpa
caressed where her cheek had been

- Johanna Shapiro, Ph.D.
Department of Family Medicine

Tesfaye (Future Hope) Photography by Patricia Lenahan, Associate Clinical Professor, Department of Family Medicine

ICU

6/11/2003

5/3/1914
(89)

6/11/2003
405->55->5
“101.5 x 3”
150/95, 102.8, 88, 24
456-6988
5->55->405

6/12/2003
405->55->5
“32!”
180/105, 103.8, 96, 32
7.51/52/29/.21
12/750/.60

6/13/2003
80/45, 103.5, 120, 12
7.42/82/38/.7
12/750/.7

6/14/2003
02:30 120 96 84 84 70 48 30 5/3/1914-6/14/2003
482.4
2:17

- Steven Cramer, Assistant Professor, Departments of Neurology and Anatomy & Neurobiology

One Night

Somewhere, thousands of miles away, an American doctor is prescribing expensive medications, maybe even sending a patient home with colorfully-packaged samples. His scrubs may be wrinkled, but they're certainly not soaked in blood; that would be simply uncouth in a US hospital. The ER is clean, with bright lights, boxes of gloves on every wall, and antibacterial soap standing dutifully next to every faucet.

But this same night here I stand, in the blood of a 23 year old man. The ancient defibrillator that refused to respond to Dr. Mwilobo's coaxing has failed him. My untrained hands, which took hours to suture his superficial wounds, but could not halt the rage of internal bleeding, have failed him. The beaded leather thong, wrapped tightly around his right bicep by the gnarled old hands of a Xhosa medicine man, has failed him. His struggling country, which cannot protect its own people from the violence that tears it apart from the bowels of the impoverished townships, has failed him. And now I watch Dr. Mwilobo leave the room to tell Lukunda's mother and younger brothers that their family's provider is dead. Lukunda. The name rolls around in my mind, this man who was born the same year as I. This man who watched me with glazed eyes only minutes ago, who did not flinch from the needle.

I am numb as I pull off my gloves and look around for the dwindling bar of soap that the nurse keeps hiding, because she says the patients will steal it. I think of how Dr. Mwilobo laughed when I told him about bedside ultrasounds. Somehow, I think he wondered at the competency of doctors who relied on machines. I think of how the nurses first smiled at my strange accent, and asked why I would leave America to come here. Everyone wants to hear about medicine in America, but I am at a loss. It seems so foreign now; my previous world of medicine, governed by anatomy exams and standardized patients. I think of my coveted medical education, with state-of-the-art facilities that shape healthcare, surrounded by the rapid unfurlings of well-funded research; the top-rate medical centers and designer antibiotics that have lost their original splendor and are now considered practically a constitutional right. As much as I am a product of this environment, I am dumbfounded by my sudden sense of abandonment.

As I leave the make-shift trauma room, I walk briskly down the hallway lined with dirty benches to avoid the reaching hands that tug at my coat. One woman tries to place her limp child in my arms. I have never felt so helpless. This must be the critical interface where solidarity with the patients is achieved, the most prominent dividing factor between these doctors and ours. Here the doctors accept medicine as imperfect. Death is not a failure, and Recovery is a blessing. They scold their patients, laugh with their patients, pray with their patients. Because they, too, are fallible.

-Nicole Datrice, Class of 2006

Fences

Money

buys fences
to keep the Other out.

It buses them to the county line and leaves exhaust flung in faces without names.

And with money comes good breeding (sometimes) and good breeding aches the conscience.

Maybe, tickles the conscience,
if it was dire.

So to swat the conscience away
money
loosens the nail
of one board in the fence.

They can swing it aside now if they really need to.
If it is dire.

And it is dire at first tide of blood blunt force trauma
They pushed through the loose board in the fence and left a smear of red fingers on the whitewash.

Then came the sniffles
first a little here and there mainly in flu season.

But then the giant dripping nose was always there pushing through the loose board in the fence.

Kids missed school
all day
that's how long it took.

The tide of people
chipped away
to widen the hole
splinters pushed deep under fingernails
flecks of whitewash mixed with wood and blood

And in the corner
the conscience sucks its pacifier

It loosened the nail,
it smacks contentedly
they can get in
if it is dire.

- Sarah Blaschko, Class of 2007

White & Red Photography by Stefano Sensi MD, PhD,
Department of Neurology

JAZZ DIVA

I like it best when she swings into scat

Triple fortissimo experienced notes of power distant thunder breathed in A minor

Or

Whispers like shock waves skin deep sounds of passionate pianissimo tremblers
honey cords
riffs of vibration unleashed

Talk to me scat static

Moans from every instrument float on scores of E minor

An ill wind hid that lush life

Sassy Sarah
Lady with a song

- Vanessa Francis,
Training Coordinator,
Human Resources

10th Annual Winter Formal: January 23, 2004
Ballroom Dance by Jason Phillips, Class of 2007 and Cathy Hung

Roseanne Bravo '06

Warren Wiechmann '06

Nicole Datrice '06

Nick Moss '06

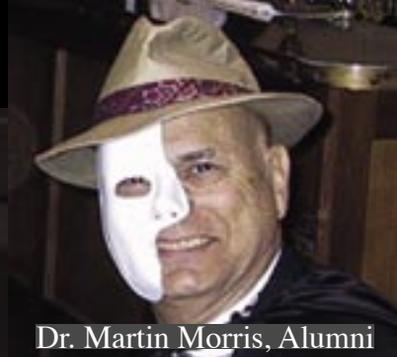

Class of 2006
and
College of Medicine
Alumni Chapter
present
Midnight Masquerade
10th Annual Winter Formal
and
Art Exhibition
by PLEXUS
January 23, 2004

Vikas Mehta '06

Lena Schultz '06

Dr. Martin Morris, Alumni

Jonathan Chen '06

Alexis Long '07

C. Gail Ryan '06

Yosemite Photography by Jose Ospina Ph.D., M.D./Ph.D. Student

The Rocks of Ahwahnhee

Cutting through the great divide of the majestic Rocks of Ahwahnhee
I find solace and peace among the few chirping birds and trees Snow packed peaks lie to my west and The drying thirst of demons lie to my east
It is no site to seek service and certainly not a time to give my fleece
But my comrade is cold and wounded
And I know of no other gift but my warmth
The father is stronger and wiser and has seen it all before He warms our beloved with fire and tells us we have a little more
Our comrade is lifted onto our leader's shoulder as we reach above the horizon Lifting the pain and anguish from our team's disposition
We know our closeness overshadows our discomfort For we are all doctors and patients and no matter where we are Our lives are forever entwined and we must love each other
We will live our lives together whether in the mountains or the stars
I need no coat to understand the fear of my brother
But I will learn from my father for the meanings
Of compassion and devotion to my patients and my doctors

Life, death and the in-between

A body which lies upon the table
A mass of tissue, bone, cartilage Caught in a tug-of-war between its preservation by our chemicals and putrid decay

It is caught between what it was in this life
On the surface of the Earth
And what it was once before Absolutely
Nothing

Although it is this mass we study Learn meticulously
hover over and inhale
It is not
The dad who adores us
The mom who loves us
The man who holds us

It is a mass.

What keeps us afloat in this state, life, is beyond any border of vertebra
any border of pleura Beyond all the earth and the moon and the sky
Beyond all comprehension
by our inadequate imaginations

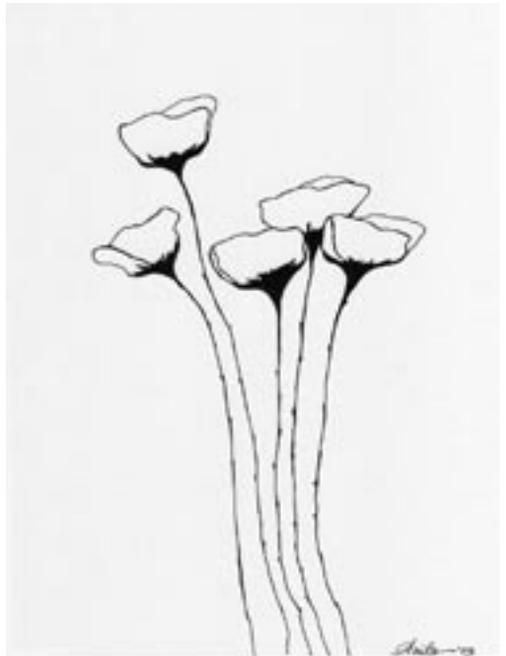

What keeps us afloat in the space of air is just what we can not see lying still in a puddle of phenol on a steel table

Love
Between the souls of this existence
The breath of life, death and the unknown
Beauty
Within every soul that blooms
Desire
To know the creator of that soul

God

For if we do not acknowledge the depth of our own existence it only reaches that distance dictated between the borders of our skin.

-Roya Saisan, Class of 2007

Line Poppies Drawing by Anita Rowhani,
Class of 2006

Ocean Song

Blue, infinite, deep and true
Touches sky like I try to do
Blue
Wants to touch me too
Mad desire fills this ocean, Blue

Warm, ever changing, soft and forlorn Carries mood like I tend to do
Warm
Holds me close I'm torn Tainted memories drown in oceans, warm

Ocean, Show me the way
To a simpler place, to a brighter day
Ocean, Take me home with you
Ocean, Show me your source
And your destination
And your sweetest temptation
Ocean, take me home with you

'Cause like you I'm Blue, infinite, deep and true
I wanna kiss the sky like you do
Blue
I wanna touch you too
Mad desire rages in me too

I'm Warm, ever changing, soft and forlorn
I carry mood just like you do
Warm
Hold me close I'm torn Tainted memories drown in oceans, warm

I'm growin' older
Yet timeless is this ocean's allure
My eyes are Blue Blinded by Your salty water
It stings but still I stay Beggin' you, Beggin' you
To show me the way

Ocean, Take me away
To a simpler place, to a brighter day
Ocean, Take me home with you
Ocean, Show me your source
And your destination
And your sweetest temptation
Ocean, take me home with you...

- Lyrics by Jeanette Waller, Class of 2007

A Prince of Alexandria

Photography by Dina Seif, Class of 2006

Ekbalam Photography by Shari Atilano, Research Associate III,
Department of Ophthalmology

Remembering Kerala Line drawing, photo, and stipple by Marianne Ross, Ph.D.

Neural Transformation

Swayed by action potential waves
Lost in the multitude of his fellow creatures
A lonely neuron questions the meaning of life.

He was born to transmit signals
He was born to produce neurotransmitters
He was born to maintain vital actions.

But, he wondered, where did these signals come from
And where will they go, he could not answer
Because the young shy neuron dared not to make synapse.

One day, having more and more synapses
A ray of consciousness crosses the length of his axon
And he becomes the image of the whole brain.

Suddenly, his individual and humble life explodes
And all his being is transformed into a magnificent body Soaked up in the fascinating melody of life.

In a sudden, his concept of self is stripped off Like torn and worn old clothes
Both frightening and welcoming is the new universe.

Reflections

Reflections of the inner type Seared with the flames of fire
No matter how far you reach
It never fails to require
The best of you and your movements Brings you from up top to bottom
Makes you forget the meaning Of why, where, how to come To peace and harmony inside
The growth that once consumed you Hold tight and never release
For fear that it may leave you
It is the growth of the soul and heart
Tormented by surrounding envy
The hatred, the discontent
The centered mind of the greedy Whether it be in you or others
It obscures the beauty of existence
For every step should be taken with caution
And every decision with persistence
In the knowledge of hope and love
And the appreciation of the mind
By recognizing the reflections
And never leaving your soul behind

Portrait of my Pal Painting by Tracy Slone, Class of 2007 and Maria Reynoso (Age 9)

PALS at UCI is a student-initiated adaptation of the big sister/ big brother program that fosters relationships between medical students and chronically ill children or their siblings.

“Topsy Turvy”

Even such systematic distraction—Fun Centers, polka dotted Curtains,
Clowns roaming the halls—cannot disguise the fact that this Is a place very different than home

In this place, open all night, lives are measured In tempos of four, and eight, and twelve, and A legion of healers clad in cartoon creatures, toil
In a perpetually still undersea world,

It perplexes,
Jerry Springer and Martha Stewart preaching their respective world orders to a sleeping child, While amidst a steady background of voices, chirps, beeps, and clicks A cadence of cries beats on—

Sharp cries, soft cries, cries without tears birthed by the pains of illness, Sharp sticks, and a stranger’s probing hands—
The path to restoration sometimes cuts, and deeply
A reality still alien to such newly drafted souls

But there is brilliance uncontained within these rooms
Of love, of the life of youth,
Of good work done well
And it is this brilliance that speaks loudest to reaffirm

“Welcome to Miller Children’s,”
A sign reads upon entry
Where among the smallest are giants, No place for a child to be.

- Michael Doo, Class of 2004

Changing Perspective

“Let’s play one-on-one!” you shout,
As we walk together on a beautiful day,
We arrive to the park and I begin to wonder,
Do we see your legs in the same way?

I see the effects of spina bifida, Legs with hardly any strength at all,
“Be careful! Does that hurt?” I call out,
As you relentlessly shoot the ball.

They seem as though they’ll snap in half,
As you wobble around the court,
But what amazes me more is the fact that you,
Seem to think nothing of the sort.

“Let’s shoot three-pointers!” you say,
And throw the ball with all your might,
And I watch with wonder as the shot,
Is 2 feet short in its flight.

Don’t you see your legs aren’t capable?
I think as I run after the miss,
Shouldn’t we be reading or coloring?
Anything but doing this!

I think it hurts me even more,
As I think of my days as a boy,
This game seemed to come so easily,
And was much more fun than any toy.

But you don’t seem to notice,
That your legs are a handicap,
You dream of playing in the NBA,
And beating the 1-3-1 trap.

“Let’s shoot from the half-court line!”
I guess you don’t see what I see,
But your unbridled optimism,
Is a wonderful lesson to me.

You teach me that the real joy is the “try”,
It can be better than the first-place prize,
And that when you measure the heart of a man,
It’s not related to his shoe-size.

When we’re back at your house,
You turn to me with a smile,
“You’re a world-champ Mike!”
No Ernilo, you’ve got me by a mile.

“Next time, let’s play soccer!”

- Mike Taylor, Class of 2007

A “Transcript” Of My Conversations with OB/GYN Surgeons

Yes sir doctor, I am a third year. Bobby Rostami, sir.

Thank you for allowing me to watch this procedure, doctor.

Yes sir I did scrub for 5 minutes.

Yes sir I tried to learn the names of the instruments.

Well I don't know, sir, I guess I didn't learn them well enough.

Yes sir, I am stupid.

Thank you for telling me how to do it correctly.

Yes sir, I agree, I hate patients too.

Yes sir, it is their fault for getting the cancer, sir.

Yes sir, I also deserve to get a tumor sir.

Well sir, I don't know why the standard approach for uterine cancer is like this.

You're right sir, this is further testament to the fact that medical students are getting stupider and stupider as the years go by.

Yes sir, I wish I were dead, too, sir.

Yes, thank you for sticking that bloody scalpel in my face sir. I now know how to use one.

Well sir I'm not used to waking up at 3:20 AM and standing on my feet for 9 straight hours.

Yes sir, it does show what kind of a pussy I am.

Yes sir, you're right. I should pray for my own death.

Thank you for praying for it as well sir.

Well yes sir, I do enjoy the sweet savory smell of cauterized flesh.

Yes sir, you can cauterize my intact flesh. Mmmm that smells great.

Yes sir, I agree. I should drop out of med school and become a shoe salesman.

Thank you, sir, for allowing me to watch this procedure, sir.

Ha ha ha . . . thanks for tripping me on the way out of the operating room, sir.

- Bobby Rostami, Class of 2005

Devil Dog Pointillism (Ink) by
Troy Pulas, Class of 2006

La Mano Photography by Steven Daines, Class of 2006

Fifth Column

The tip of my right, ring finger begins to ache
it swells into a tender knob hot against my cheek

The surgeon says
it could be cancer

The game plan is:
I go under they go in a biopsy goes to pathology

Depending on the findings
I wake up repaired
missing my finger up to the wrist or missing my right arm up to the shoulder

- Brian McMichael, Class of 2007

Undulations

I see you through the bandages wrapped around my face, but you are unaware that I am watching. Instead of shaking my hand hello, you slice into me with a steady hand and the sharp blade, newly opened and fastened to your scalpel.

Only the quick, suppressed gulp caught in your throat as you make the first cut shows me you think this is somewhat unnatural. You hide behind your goggles and gloves, but my essence creeps deep into your lungs and becomes part of you. My layers imprint on your mind. You caress my lungs like a lover, but my lovers could never reach so deep inside.

You own me, I gave myself to you, but I own a piece of you as well. You didn't count that as part of the bargain when you filled out all of the application forms and shook hands and smiled on interview days. You didn't think about me then, just fleeting thoughts on where our visitation rights would take place.

You must think about me now. You are required to. It is part of the course. You took out government loans, groveled to mom and dad, and sold your soul to the Ph.D. program so I could be part of your life.

Don't fail me now. Don't become too familiar even though we are intimate. I know you think I am fat. And cold. And old. The people who love me don't mind. I led a rich life. Besides, I'm just watching. I am not making any judgments about you.

-Sarah Blaschko, Class of 2007

Face Color Pencil by
Glen Moore, Class of 2006

Welcome to Plexus Audio, the newest addition to the Plexus Journal of Arts and Humanities Publication. The concept behind Plexus Audio is to provide a medium for audio artists to showcase their talents in anything from music to poetry to plays. All art is created by affiliates of the UC Irvine College of Medicine and Medical Center and can be downloaded from our website at <http://www.plexusaudio.com>.

So please check out the variety of innovative and interesting audio art we have to offer and stay tuned for future developments from Plexus and Plexus Audio.

Enjoy,

Nick Athanasiou
Audio Editor

Jeanette Waller
Assistant Audio Editor

Music

Classical South Indian music on the Violin
.: Sagus Sampath, MS3

Behind Your Eyes
Taboo's Playground
Homie
.: Matt Sanford, Staff

Anatomic Reflexion
.: Anatomical Rappers

Sunshine Five
Del Metal
.: Nick Athanasiou, MS2

National Anthem
.: Boys to Med

Natural Disaster
Love of my Life
Gone Fishin'
.: Jeanette Waller, MS1

c3 Beat
.: Cliff Wang, MS3

mein glaubiges herze
kdyz mne stara matke
quando men vo
.: Karin Sindavinsky, MS1

Spoken Word

Jazz Diva
.: Vanessa Francis, Staff

Poetry

Driving with Grandpa
.: Johanna Shapiro, Faculty

Plays

The First Day of Anatomy
.: Vikas Mehta, Scott Bradley

An Extreme Caricature of my Clinical Service Experience
.: Vikas Mehta

Multimedia

Talent Show Plexus
A/V Presentation

UCI College of Medicine
2004 Plexus